The Irish Folklore Commission is established by the government of the Republic of Ireland. It is created to preserve Irish cultural heritage, including fairy legends.

English author Reginald Scot defines fairies as “bugs,” and describes them as a product of fear in his book The Discovery of Witchcraft.

Geoffrey of Monmouth writes the poem The Life of Merlin. One of the characters of the poem is Morgan Le Fay, a fairy sorceress.

The Nutcracker ballet, with music by Pyotr Tchaikovsky, premieres in December of this year. One of its characters is a fairy known as Sugar Plum.

Photos of two young girls playing with fairies are taken in Cottingley, England. Believed to be genuine, they soon become a public sensation. The pictures are later proved to be a hoax.

Artemis Fowl is released in theaters. This movie adaptation of a popular fantasy book series of the same name is a modern take on Irish fairy legends.
