

Use the information found in Aquariums to help you complete the following activity.

1. Field trips to aquariums can sometimes include special access to the facility's residents, such as .
2. Signs near the viewing area feature about the animals in the tank. They name the animals, and supply information on their size, diet, and habitat.
3. Tours often include talks on the of the animals found at the aquarium. Guides use models to show important body parts.
4. Do not feed or touch animals unless you have from aquarium staff. Some animals may be on special diets.
5. In the 1700s AD, were successfully kept in glass containers in England.
6. Aquarists are responsible for providing the animals with opportunities.

